Difference Between the Two Packages

Federal Firearm Rights Restoration (FFRR) Service Options

This is not a U.S. government document or fee. We are not the Department of Justice, not affiliated with DOJ, ATF, or any federal, state, or tribal agency, and we do not decide applications. Go to justice.gov/ffrr. This site is not legal advice. Federal relief is discretionary by the Dept of Justice.

NFRA ($5,000) vs. NFRA Plus+ ($10,000)

Aspect	NFRA ($5,000)	NFRA Plus+ ($10,000)
Role of counsel	Guides the client, prepares the application and legal narrative, organizes documents, and submits the package	Full-service handling of the process
Document collection	Client obtains most records (PSI, indictment, judgment, sentence-completion proof, state criminal history, etc.)	Counsel obtains the key court and probation records (including the PSI Report)
Client effort	Higher — client must gather and supply most supporting documents	Lower — counsel handles the difficult document requests
Follow-up	Counsel provides guidance on DOJ responses	Counsel manages follow-up and responses more proactively
Best for	Organized clients who can obtain their own records and want lower-cost representation	Clients who want counsel to handle the heavy lifting, especially getting the PSI and other hard-to-obtain records

Bottom Line

The main difference is who does the work of collecting the records.

- NFRA ($5,000) = Counsel prepares and submits the application; you gather the documents.
- NFRA Plus+ ($10,000) = Counsel prepares, submits, and obtains the key records for you.
